STUDENT WALKOUT JUNE 30

As you might have heard, due to recent changes the government is putting forward, some of the teachers at your school are going to end up working till they're 68, and teachers will have to pay a lot more for their pensions.

So there's a national strike being balloted on and there's a good chance your school might end up being shut on June 30th.

This isn't just their battle though, it's everyone's. If the government gets their way those who aren't rich enough to retire early will be working till we drop.

That means that if more people are still working there'll probably be even less jobs for you when you leave school or uni than there are now.

WHOSE SCHOOLS? OUR SCHOOLS!

On top of that, this is just part of the government's attacks on education as a whole.

They massively increased the debt you'll get into if you go to uni and they're getting rid of EMA. They're cutting education chunk by chunk so only the most privileged will be able to get access to it.

So how can we fight back? Well grab a placard and show you support them on the day. Talk to your teachers about the issues facing them and you. Don't go to lessons and walk out. Be creative, help out on the picket lines and get out onto the streets.

Like the recent student demos and the walkouts against the war back in the day showed, you can really make an impact when you get together and take action.
